

UNIONS ON THE REBOUND training

Union membership is on the rise. Moreover, recent legislative initiatives, if passed, will make it easier for unions to organize. Now, more than ever, it is important for employers and supervisors to learn how to recognize and be prepared for possible union organizing, and to be trained on the rules that govern employer and union conduct.

During this two-hour training program, supervisors will learn how unions organize, how to avoid organizing efforts, and what they can and cannot say to employees about unions. Each participant will also develop his/her own personal communication plan so they can be proactive when talking to their employees about unions.

AREAS THAT WILL BE COVERED DURING THIS TRAINING INCLUDE:

- Why companies wish to remain union free
- How unions organize
- The future of union organizing
- How to remain union free
- How to respond to organizing
- Educating employees about their rights

This training is key for supervisors to learn about unions, their organizing tactics, and how to maintain a union-free workforce.

Ogletree Deakins

